

About Project

Access Livelihoods is conducting a study on value chain assessment to reduce the post-harvest loss for five commodities across three districts to understand the present situation and gaps at various levels to minimise the post-harvest loss. The respondent of the survey will belong to people involved in cultivating specific commodities. The study will help understand the demand and supply chain along with the cultivation process and help to make necessary technological interventions to decrease the post-harvest loss, maintain the nutritional value and provide better prices to the farmers.
